1. Chinese Communist infantry officers are trained in 6 Advanced Infantry Training Schools (AITC) and 38 Infantry Training Schools (ITS). Incomplete figures from Chinese Communist Army Headquarters show that over 7,500 officers are being trained in the AITC and over 60,000 in the ITS. The AITC were formed by reorganizing various army officers schools and military and political colleges in the various military areas. The trainees are primarily old Chinese Communist military cadres of regimental and battalion grades. There is one AITC in each of the 6 military areas. The ITS were formed by reorganizing army officer academies and officer training classes of the various military districts. The trainees in these schools are primarily Chinese Communist military cadres of platoon grade and newly recruited intellectuals and workers. There is one ITS in each military district.
2. Before March 1951 no uniform regulations had been established for training infantry cadres in the military areas and districts. Schools were established whenever needed, and the organization, designations, curricula and length of training were not uniform. In order to establish uniformity, the Revolutionary Military Council (RMC) instructed the military areas and districts that all schools would have to be reorganized. Unit designations would then be issued by the RMC.
3. Designations and locations of the ITS and AITC are as follows:

1 AITC, Chengch'u (城固), Shensi.
 2 AITC, Hsienk'aishih (陝陽), western suburb of Chungking.
 3 AITC, T'angshan (湯山), Nanking.
 4 ITS, Tuch'ang (土城, 30-32).
 5 AITC, Shihchiachiang (石川江, 38-02).
 6 AITC, Fukden.

1 ITS, Yenan (102-27, 36-36).
 2 ITS, Nancheng (107-04, 32-05).
 3 ITS, Lanchou (103-41, 36-03).
 4 ITS, Yinch'uan (106-19, 38-28).
 5 ITS, Heining (黑寧).
 6 ITS, Urumchi (烏魯木齊, 40-48).
